Researching Legislative History and Intent

(Taken from the Legislative Reference Library website, <http://www.lrl.state.tx.us/legis/intent/intentguide.html>)

Legislative histories in Texas must be compiled by the individual researcher from many materials. For histories from the 73rd Legislature (1993) forward, this information can be found through Texas Legislature Online (<http://www.legis.state.tx.us/>).

Follow these basic steps:

1. Determine the bill number that enacted the statutory language and the session.

(a) If you do not have the bill number, you will need to search by the subject of the legislation, Vernon's statute, or session law chapter number. For a complete discussion of how to find the bill number using one of these methods, see the Legislative Research Library website.

(b) If you have the bill number, you can search by that number.

2. Examine the bill file

The bill file is the collection of official documents produced during the bill's movement through the legislative process. It may contain (a) Introduced version; (b) House committee report with vote sheet and bill analysis; (c) Engrossed version; (d) Senate committee report with vote sheet; (e) Senate amendments printing; (f) Conference committee report with side-by-side analysis; (g) Enrolled version; (h) Fiscal notes; and (i) Senate Research Center bill analyses.

3. Find the bill history.

The bill history is a list of all legislative actions on a bill and the dates on which each action took place. When using Texas Legislature Online, click on "Actions." On rare occasions, statements of legislative intent will be recorded into the House and Senate Journals. Always check the House and Senate Journals rather than relying on a bill's actions to signal such a statement.

4. Listen to tape recordings of legislative discussion.

In the 63rd Legislature (1973), the Legislature began audio taping public hearings held by committees and the floor debates in the House and Senate. These tapes are often the best source of information on legislative intent. In order to listen to or order these tapes, you will need the following from the bill history: (a) names of the House and/or Senate committees to which the bill was referred; (b) dates the bill was considered by committee or subcommittee in public hearings; and (c) dates of the bill’s second and third readings in the House and/or the Senate. Audio tapes may be ordered through mail or obtained in person at the House or Senate media offices.

Legislative History and Intent (continued)

5. Consult other helpful documents.

Companion bills, House and Senate Journals, Legislative Interim Reports, newspaper clippings and publications from State Agencies and Commissions are the kinds of additional documents it is helpful to consult when trying to determine legislative intent. On Texas Legislature Online, click on “Companion” from the Bill History to find companion bills. A link to Senate and House Journals can be found on the dropdown menu for each legislative branch.

For additional information on how to research legislative history and intent, see the Legislative Reference Library website: <http://www.lrl.state.tx.us/lrlhome.cfm>.
